

Cogito Group has successfully joined the NZ "All of Government" Telecommunications as-a-Service (TaaS) panel to provide fully managed Authentication Service.

The Cogito service provides New Zealand Government agencies the ability to select the level of security and assurance they require for the establishment of trusted identities and services within their organisation.

Richard Brown, Cogito Group Managing Director said, "This new innovative service brings a unified approach to security across all government agencies for New Zealand. Our services enable secure interagency collaboration by providing trusted identity, authentication and authorisation mechanisms. Our authentication services will further enable inter-agency trust through the provision of credentials and digital signatures."

Cogito Group successfully completed a signing ceremony with government officials. The signing ceremony was held to ensure the process is conducted in accordance with the established policy.

This service assists New Zealand Government departments and agencies to provide the economic and social benefits of improved digital service delivery to its citizens in a secure environment. Cogito Group is proud to be part of this strategic vision and real world innovation by providing the authentication services that will assist in the protection of privacy and create more trustworthy environments.

The technological landscape we are all working within is one of permanent change. While connections to digital services and technology grow, data generated by those connections will be a challenge to manage. The New Zealand Government and their 'All of Government' approach through TaaS gives them the ability to create a future ready foundation for the Government and its citizens that is modular, forward-looking and balances security, usability and cost effectiveness. It is an exciting time to be providing services here." said Richard Brown
